

Abstract

A method and a device are for stabilizing living beings, in order to examine a living being to be examined by way of an examination instrument during a predeterminable time period in an examination area. To this end, the living being is enclosed by way of at least two gates in the examination area during at least the predeterminable time period Δt needed for the examination. As such, anesthesia can be obviated.